Allianz Partners Provides Mobile Charging Solutions for FAW-Volkswagen Audi EVs

Allianz Partners China recently landed a deal with FAW-Volkswagen Audi, to provide mobile and valet charging services for the first batch of 2019 FAW-Volkswagen Audi electric models launched lately.

Pre-booking the charging service is flexible and easy-to-use. Owners can book a mobile charging vehicle and specify the time and place to get charged when the battery level is running low. With the valet charging service, drivers can book a butler and specify the time and place to meet and the butler will return the car after charging it at a fast public charging station nearby.

Beijing and Shanghai are the pilot cities in the first phase of the program, with the models Audi e-tron, the first electric premium C-class SUV from Audi, and the Audi Q2L e-tron, the compact electric SUV designed for the Chinese market, both launched lately. By leveraging a highly competitive portfolio of charging solutions – home charging, more than 120,000 charging piles in more than 200 cities, charging stations at over 20 brands (By 2020, the coverage will be expanded to over 300 cities with 180,000 to 200,000 charging piles), and now mobile and valet charging – FAW-Volkswagen Audi is creating an experience of mobility of “infinite possibilities”, as one of the leaders in China’s premium car market.

“We aim to build a comprehensive EV charging solution, growing from emergency to more daily services,” said Christophe Aniel, CEO of Allianz Partners Greater China. “This project marks the first time for Allianz Partners and Audi to work together in China. The success of this cooperation will lay a solid foundation for the two sides to carry out broader cooperation, and also pave the way for us to expand in the new energy vehicle market segment.”
